

DREAM PHASES

...when the Sixties and Seventies are back and paired with Psychedelic Rock, Progressive Pop and lot of colors that's the sound of DREAM PHASES from Los Angeles, California. And a lot of Cali-feeling is implemented in the music of the band. It's a Jefferson Aiplane meets early Coldplay...it's a the 60's traveled to the 2000s...it's a Teenage Fan Club knocking on the Beach Boys door...simply: it's a unique mix who is en vogue these days...

Dream Phases began as the bedroom recording project of songwriter Brandon Graham. After spending time developing the sound and being influenced by a host of home recording auteurs, Brandon passed his demos along to a few select friends, including his brother Shane and long time collaborator Kevin Baudouin. From there, Dream Phases was formed. Sharing a love ranging from noise pop to classic soul to dreamy folk, the band kicked off their live shows with a residency at Harvard & Stone in January 2017.

Shortly after formation, Dream Phases released their debut EP "Maybe Tomorrow," produced by Graham himself and put out on lolipop Records. Obscure Sound's Mike Mineo called the album, "swaying, hypnotic melodies of vintage psych-folk and rock with a contemporary pop charm." The March release also marked their first tour including an official showcase at South by Southwest. July saw hit the road again as part of the Mad Alchemy Caravan and, most recently, Dream Phases released the single 'Easy Love' on Lunar Ruins followed by a tour of California.

"An effortlessly winning piece of gently psychedelic power-pop that sounds like Teenage Fanclub turning into Apples In Stereo. (Teenagers In Stereo?) Anyway, what that means to you is: oohs, ahhs, hooks, riffs and unflagging confidence and charisma." - Chris Ziegler, LA Record